PennState Health

The Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at Penn State Health Milton S. Hershey Medical Center is known for:

- Complete rehabilitation care: Penn State Health offers the most comprehensive rehabilitation services in central Pennsylvania. The program provides intensive and acute (brief but severe) care, as well as transitional care from the hospital and into the patient's home or a nursing facility.
- Accreditations and recognitions: The Joint Commission and CARF (Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities) have both recognized Penn State's rehabilitation program as a Comprehensive Integrated Inpatient Rehabilitation Program (CIIRP) for both adults and children.
- Highly specialized team: The physical medicine team includes trained specialists who work together to deliver comprehensive care, including board-certified physiatrists and specialists, as well as nurses and therapists with advanced rehabilitation training.
- Research: Penn State research studies bring new treatments and therapies to patients.

The physical medicine and rehabilitation team at Penn State Health provides the most comprehensive rehabilitation services in central Pennsylvania. We offer comprehensive care from time of injury through recovery for patients with amputations, musculoskeletal and neuromuscular disorders, acute and chronic pain, spasticity, spinal cord injury, traumatic brain injury, stroke, cancer and more.

Penn State Health Milton S. Hershey Medical Center is the only academic medical center in central Pennsylvania (5-county region including Dauphin county as well as other parts of central Pennsylvania, with some patients referred from neighboring states of Maryland, West Virginia, and New York as well), We offer the latest approaches and a full spectrum of rehabilitative medicine and services including leading-edge treatments before they're widely available with methods supported by clinical research and medical innovation.
